Professor Chapman, M.A., concluded a successful course of lectures on "Astronomy" on Thursday evening. Mr. W. T. Gronow proposed a hearty vote of thanks to the lecturer. Mr. W. K. Duncan seconded. It was carried amidst applause. Mr. Chapman briefly replied, and expressed himself as being much pleased with the large attendance at each course, and hoped that other centres would learn of the success gained at Port Pirie, and thus give them confidence in arranging for lectures of a similar nature. Mr. Chapman explained that this was a new departure on the part of the University, and that the success had so far warranted its adoption.

University, 8—Meeting of the University Shakespeare Society. Lecture by the Rev. A. T. Boas on "Shakspeare on marriage."

"The Register," 28th August, 1897.

SHAKSPEARE ON MARRIAGE.

The science-room at the University was overtaxed in holding capacity to accommodate the members of the University Shakspeare Society and friends last Thursday, to listen to a lecture by the Rev. A. T. Boas, Vice-President, upon "Shakspeare, and what he thought on Marriage." The subject, as viewed by the Bard of Avon, had not before been dealt with by this Society, and, so far as the searching of the lecturer could extend, had it been by any writer. No other subject, declared the lecturer, had been more written on, criticised, condemned, praised, and advocated, and had given more stimulus for thought than that of marriage. Shakspeare had spoken with unerring impressiveness upon the subject through the images of his temple to the worshippers of the Muses, but few had taken the trouble to ascertain his views and thoughts in his incomparable works. To better understand these views Mr. Boas dealt at length with the social aspects of the Elizabethan era, taking the
