

1st. May 1947.

My dear Frank,

I feel perfectly amiable about postponing publication of my little table, which isn't big enough to fit anywhere unless we can find a midget twin to go with it on the same page.

I can't think what Oliver & Boyd have been doing about the Tables, on which after all they must have been doing tolerably well, but perhaps Christmas cards are more profitable. I hope to goodness they are not going to hold up Heredity in the same sort of way.

I initialed your paper for publication and sent it in to Mather, who at the moment is acting for Darlington and who in any case would read that sort of paper for him. I have no doubt that it will be published without delay, but I am not sure how much the journal will stand of the kind of material which I used to publish in the Annals. In fact I believe we should have allowed for a bigger number or more frequent publication if we are to fill the need that exists.

Yours sincerely,
