Dear Yates,

I have just received the forms of candidature for the International Institute of Statistics, and wonder if you would care to be put up. It has a meeting every two or three years; this year a complete failure at Prague, for which often financial assistance is made by the host country. So far as I can see, there are four vacancies for English candidates. I do not know who is being put up. I think the subscription is £1 annually.

May I come round Saturday afternoon to plan Lytham in your garden?

Yours sincerely,
