Dear Andrade,

I think you may like to see what I say about Charles Singer, the Historian of Science.

Sincerely yours,

Enc.

Prof. E. N. da C. Andrade, F.R.S.
Lamarck ..., he enunciated the 'law of use and disuse,' inextricably connected with his name.

I believe he enunciated no such law, but has a great deal about the "sentiment intérieur."

i.e. the will or desire of the animal.

Use and disuse were professed by Darwin as a probable cause of inheritable variation. This action has often been associated more harmonically, the electric, more general than locomotive, of the intention of equals character.
