Dear Fisher.

Ford tells me, in reply to mine, that he is getting on with Lamarckism. I advise him not to hurry, as the controversy will last for another 100 years. That creed gets some nice blows in our review - rats, & something else, I forget what. Student's remarks seem to me important. As to your remarks on p. 336, beginning "one of the remarkable things about nebulas... -", if such results can come from X rays, I see no difficulty in holding that they can also come from domestication. I believe that my father had some grounds for his views, but

I agree with you that - after the amount of blending he put into his particulate theory of inheritance, and without segregation, he could not get a logical foundation for his beliefs.

I may have another whack at you about free will - if my brain is so clear enough - and, if so, you will have brought it on yourself!

Yours truly
