CRIPPS'S CORNER,
FOREST ROW,
SUSSEX.

Dear Fisher.

This letter will make you swear all Sunday. So much the better, for then you will be in the mood to write 'bosh', 'silly' and other suitable comments in the margin of the enclosed draft of a letter to Nature. Seriously I should like your views as to whether it is wise or foolish to send it. I care but little what happens, for I have had the amusement of writing it. I suppose I ought to get it typed up if you.

I have looked at Hoggan or Holdane again and am still puzzled. But I must confess that - it gives me the uncomfortable feeling that I do not understand it well myself - I mean the action of natural selection. I shall have to reconsider my views on the uniformity of woven structures, so you are saved from that infliction for the present.

Yours sincerely

Alfred Russel

It is rather a shame to make you my confessor on all these matters.
