

23 February 1931.

Major L. Darwin, Sc.D.,
Cripps's Corner,
Forest Row,
Sussex.

Dear Major Darwin,

Your present of the "Statistical Journal" was an especially pleasant one this time, as it contained Bradford Hill's review of my Book. I am as pleased as Punch, as I do not think I could name any head that I would rather choose to get the idea into; and he seems to have got it very clearly.

I have noticed for years what a clear-headed writer he is, but he modestly disclaims being a mathematician, although he regularly seems to use the right method in problems where professed mathematicians have often been at fault. He is a son of Leonard Hill, whom perhaps you know.

With many thanks,

Yours sincerely,