Dear Major Darwin,

I have never written ~~to~~ thank you for the two fine books on economics which you sent me. I have been dipping into them but so far have not made out enough sense to be worth writing about. Many thanks for them, whether I do any good with them or not.

I listened to your talk last night, and thought it most successful. The points you made were perfectly clear, and the end was very inspiring. I have met Mrs Adams, but I do not know how much she will try to deal with in the following talks — I was disappointed with Carr Saunders, for although he has made remarkable progress with the facts, he seemed to feel that our attitude should be the same as if they had been entirely different.

Yours sincerely,
