

I guess I wrote some nonsense to you yesterday. I think that as a species gets older, the chief change which takes place is that survival becomes less and less fortuitous & more & more correlated with innate differences. This is what Salisbury, amongst other things, overlooked.

L. Darwin

[10 June 1930]

JNB