My dear Fisher

I did write to Poatton about bullcalfs, and Enclose his very civil reply, in case you should like to read it.
I could send his bat paper, if you like, but doubt if it is worth your while. It shows that bats are great ~~fast~~ hunters or-motes, but generally take no notice of them when sitting.
I suggested to Poatton in reply that their retina may be like the margin of ours, that is much more sensitive to movement than to form. I like the idea that the spot on the wing helps to draw attention away from the body. Let me have enclosed back Someday.

Yours sincerely

Leonard Dawkins
