My dear Fisher,

Herewith the last of the proofs, a fact over which we shall both rejoice.

I am very glad that you have called my attention to Baldwin's speech. I confess I have not read it all yet. Please read enclosed to the L.P.S. and post it if it is alright. If I have not put in a long enough extract please add to it.

You will get a type written copy before my ^{of} ~~at~~ my least attempt that that blessed paragraph. The problem I have in my mind is as follows — To what extent do the social advantages of small families affect the relative fertility of different castes between which there is no exchange?
Does the cuckoo effect make the lower castes more fertile. Is this the Cobb effect viewed rather differently?
My ^{hand} is rather tired with my work with a house full of guests not to mention the Eugenics troubles which have worried us both.

This paragraph is therefore weighing rather heavily on my mind. If you still think it wrong the more nearly you will supply me with sentences of about the right length putting in something which is sound and relevant the more grateful I shall be. What I want to do above all things is, as it were, to close up the hole.

Again repeating the letter I am giving you

Yours sincerely
L. Darwin
