

Dear Tucker

[April 17, 1857]

Herewith my pamphlet.

The newly added parts are typewritten, and I think you will readily see where they come in.

It is with regard to these new parts especially that I should welcome you help to detecting howlers, especially as I don't think you will be in opposition.

The less I cover the print of course the better I shall be pleased. I fear I have used 'whomsoever' and 'ye' rather casually; but I don't mind, because it only indicates that I was not in receipt, which is true. My address till Sunday was with the Cripps's Corner, Fines Row, and I have scrap heaped nearly the whole of the 2 last paragraphs. If you read ~~back~~^{type} written ~~on the~~ first of all, you will see that I am driving at what I modified the stress laid on my notebook a year ago. I don't know who has put the idea of a balance leading to a distribution of generosity the same sort out. But it is fairly obvious. I shall revise the type written partly accordingly. I am greatly obliged to you in your sincerity

D. Darwin