My dear Fisher,

I have now had time to consider your letter of the 21st April, with which I find myself in general agreement. I think that to look at experimental work always tends to focus the mind too much on sudden changes as compared with very slow effects. I return your letter with a few comments referred to by numbers. Will you kindly let me have it back some day? If you have anything more to add, I shall be glad to hear it. If so, of course, I should be only too glad to send you my paper once again as I always value your criticisms.

I am sending you a letter which will serve as a testimonial, I believe it is more effective to write it in this friendly way than as a formal document, but I could easily adopt the more formal tone if you prefer it.

Yours sincerely,

S. Dawson
