My dear Ron,

I cannot possibly tell you how delighted I am that you have been awarded the Darwin Medal. I hope it may be a happiness to you that your Senior Colleagues have rated your work so far above the general achievements of Science as to have awarded you both a Royal and a Darwin Medal. But I hope you realize also that there are very many younger men who have found inspiration in your writings and personal help, which has been the decisive factor in their scientific development. And I expect you can guess, my dear Ron, how great a joy this is to your personal friends.

Yours truly,
Henry
